Now she finds herself stranded in a tiny remote town just off the highway, with no way to her original destination. Shes alone, on edge, and unsure who to trust. Her instincts scream to get far away and fast. But how and where? Jameson Grant struggles through the roughest year of his life. Suffering from the loss of his father, one grief stricken night, he made a mistake. One which cost him the only woman hes ever loved. Each lonely day hes faced with the constant reminders of how quick things can change. Throwing himself into the one thing he has left, his music, helps dull the pain he fights to keep hidden. His last salvation begins to crumble as things spiral out of control and he has no choice but to face the music of his past. The last thing he needs or wants in his life is a woman with more trouble on her heels than the best of country music lyrics. But Melody sings a sirens call within him that cant be ignored. Jameson and Melody bond in ways stronger than either could have imagined, but one dangerous person from her past may threaten it all... If she doesnt flee before he can convince her to stay, and that some love songs last an eternity.
