

Fifty Days to Sunrise

Her life is a love story, but then what's a woman to do when her husband dies three thousand miles from home? Scream, cry or run. It's 2003, a year and a half after her husband's death. Fifty-three years old and alone, Lissa Maguire seethes with grief. She has to cope, but makes a self-destructive mess of it. Lissa's parents ask her to spend the summer in small-town Gifford, Minnesota, helping them move to an apartment. Cleaning out the attic of her childhood home, Lissa discovers her old diaries, and her potholed road to healing begins. But when an old friend turns up, she's confused. Her life in shreds, Lissa desperately needs to find peace. She even wonders if God has abandoned her. Healing a broken heart is a lot to ask it hurts.
