

Mastering Inga (Service & Submission Book 2)

To Inga, serving wasn't just a job—it was who she was, right down to her bones. The picture of the tall, dark and handsome physician in the assignment profile intrigued her more than the money he offered, more than the generous live-in accommodations, more even than the chance for her to be a caregiver to his two young children in America. No, the picture of the children's father sparked something else in her—an even deeper desire. A need to serve him. For Inga still yearned to serve a man—in every way he required. A prominent surgeon, wealthy, attractive, and successful, Garrett seemed to have the perfect life. But underneath all of that, he knew one thing for certain: he was a mess. Losing his wife had been devastating enough, but raising two children alone only made recovering from her death that much more difficult. Somehow they'd made it through though, scarred, but together. Now, it was time to do something positive, time to take a step forward. And that started with finding someone who could give his two beloved children what he couldn't—a woman's touch, a woman's caring, and a woman's love. The lovely blonde woman from Sweden would do nicely—she loved the children, and they loved her right back. He'd just have to ignore the dramatic curves of her lush body, those gorgeous Nordic blue eyes, and the way her sun-kissed skin seemed to glow when she smiled. Yes, that wouldn't be a problem at all. Right? Not a problem that is until he learned what she really was, what she really wanted—and what he'd needed all along. Another woman to kneel at his feet, another woman who obeyed every command he'd give her, another woman to worship him in every way he demanded. Perhaps he'd finally found what he was looking for, but he'd never know for sure. Because the one woman he wanted, was the very woman he couldn't have. How could he make Inga his, in every way a man could, when she was the caregiver for his own flesh and blood? Publishers Warning: Intended for mature readers. 18 and over only! This is a MF BDSM contemporary romance.
