

Birmingham and West Bromwich Trams

From the late nineteenth century until 1939, a series of tram routes ran between Birmingham and West Bromwich, including steam trams, electric trams, and in the early years a horse tram service operated on behalf of one of the tramway companies by a local undertaker. The route was electrified by West Bromwich Corporation and operated by Birmingham & Midland Tramways (who had first operated the steam trams in August 1885), South Staffordshire Tramways and, later, Birmingham Corporation Tramways. Immediately before the Second World War, the last of the routes between Birmingham and West Bromwich were replaced by more cost-effective buses. In this book, David Harvey uses a collection of rare photographs to examine these tram routes that ran through the West Bromwich area, including Smethwick, Oldbury, Wednesbury and Dudley.
