Who knew snow could be so hot? All summer long, campground manager and wilderness guide Ashley Turner dreams of the snowfall that will bring her the peace and quiet she craves. This year, though, her Cascade Mountain solitude has been threatened by too many close encounters with the local wildlife. A huge, unusually aggressive cougar is stalking the area near her cabin, and something has to be done before someone gets hurt. But share her secluded retreat with a wildlife biologist? Though he's the perfect picture of Native American hunkiness, that's where she draws the line. When Dr. Jake Eagle Feather shows up on her doorstep, he's prepared to call her shotgun-waving bluff. Until he can study and stop the cougar's strange behavior, she and everyone else in these snowbound mountains are in danger. As if on cue, the cougar attacks, forcing Ashley to reluctantly give in to the inevitable. Close quarters intensify the pull of attraction between them. Even as their resistance melts in a whirlwind of sweet, hot desire, a predator is waiting out the storm for the next chance to stalk its prey. Warning: This book contains graphic language and love scenes hot enough to melt the polar ice caps.
