

Vivienne falls hard for Jacob's charms. Yet she doesn't know whether Jacob can let love into his heart. A romantic trip to Barcelona draws her closer to him, and she hopes it will last. But a shocking incident at a costume party snaps Vivienne back to reality. She's been naive and discovers that jealousy works both ways. "Vivienne was playing a dangerous game. Jacob was a billionaire heartthrob. How did you hold on to a man like that? She was with him now. But what about tomorrow, or next week? There was a lot of opportunity, and too many other women that were prettier than she was. Vivienne was more in love than she'd thought possible, but Jacob hadn't voiced such sentiment. It was impossible to envision life without him, yet Vivienne couldn't see how they could have a future without love. She hoped to tear down the walls around his heart. But as the days went by, she began to wonder if Jacob would allow true love into his heart, or whether he was too damaged. She didn't know for sure, but prayed that her love could heal." Vivienne prays that her love can heal Jacob's damaged soul, unable to envision a future without him.
